

I wish to express my opposition to loosening the rules concerning how many media outlets can be controlled by one person or corporation. The trend of conglomerates controlling the information disseminated in the media is a disturbing one, one that curtails free speech and marginalizes the speech of those who have limited access to the media. Democracy is at risk in a society where the voices of a few suppress the voices of the many.